

Advocacy Evaluation Update

An Innovation Network Publication

Issue # 5 • February 2009

Greetings!

Welcome to the fifth issue of Advocacy Evaluation Update!

We're pleased to be your source for advocacy evaluation news. The field of advocacy evaluation continues to be enriched by new knowledge. We hope you find our reports of these developments informative and inspirational.

If you have any insights, comments, or resources to share about advocacy evaluation, don't keep them to yourself! Contact us to share your contributions with Advocacy Evaluation Update's growing list of subscribers (560 and counting).

We also welcome your comments on resources found at the Point K Learning Center. Just click on "Review this Resource" to add your impressions of anything in Point K (free login required).

Innovation Network
advocacy [at] innonet [dot] org

In This Issue:

What's New

fresh findings/recent resources/current conversations

1. Advocacy Evaluation Advances: Meeting to Move the Field Forward ... page 2
2. Advocacy Session Summaries from the AEA Conference ... page 2

Looking Ahead

upcoming events / dates to save / work in progress

3. Deadline Alert! Call for Sessions ... page 3
4. New Journal to Focus on Advocacy ... page 4

We define advocacy as "a wide range of activities conducted to influence decision makers at various levels." This means not only traditional advocacy work like litigation, lobbying, and public education, but also capacity building, network formation, relationship building, organizing, communication, and leadership development.
–Innovation Network

Quick Links

Focus Area: Advocacy Evaluation

Advocacy evaluation resources at the Point K Learning Center \(free login required\)

About Innovation Network

What's New

(fresh findings / recent resources / current conversations)

Advocacy Evaluation Advances: Meeting to Move the Field Forward

More than 120 advocates, evaluators, and funders convened at Advocacy Evaluation Advances in Los Angeles, California, USA on January 20-21, 2009. Field representatives came together to talk about recent learnings from fieldwork, exchange ideas, and identify areas for additional field-building and strengthening.

The California Endowment, with additional support from the Annie E. Casey Foundation and The Atlantic Philanthropies, hosted the gathering. Conference organizers are working on a follow-up document from the convening. The document will cover the themes, findings, and resources discussed during the two-day event. Advocacy Evaluation Update will bring you that summary when it is released.

Three resources from the convening are already available on Point K:

- The convening's framing paper
- Julia Coffman and Ehren Reed presented their paper, "Unique Methods in Advocacy Evaluation."
- Ted Lempert, president of Children Now, offered his list of "Ten Considerations for Effective Advocacy Evaluation" from an advocate's perspective. We would love to have your comments on this item—click on "Review this Resource" in Point K to add your thoughts.

Read more:

- The California Endowment's webpage for convening participants
- The Aspen Institute's David Devlin-Foltz' reflections on the convening

Advocacy Evaluation Session Summaries from AEA Conference

The American Evaluation Association \(AEA\) 2008 conference featured a wealth of advocacy evaluation lessons. The Advocacy and Policy Change Topical Interest Group ("Advocacy TIG") had a major presence at the November conference, sponsoring fifteen sessions. Funders, advocates, and evaluators talked about their experiences with effective advocacy evaluation approaches and ways to build capacity. We are pleased to bring you the insights presented at nine of those sessions—many thanks to the presenters for sharing their materials with Advocacy Evaluation Update. Session materials are available through the Point K Learning Center (free login required).

AEA Advocacy Evaluation Session Summaries, continued

Sessions included:

1. Online Evaluation Resources
2. Striving for Alignment: One Funder's Lessons in Supporting Advocacy
3. Complex Challenges in Evaluating Advocacy: Internal Governance Structures and Public Policy Dispute Resolutions
4. Practical Guidance and Tools for Advocacy Evaluation
5. Assessing Foundation Communications: A New Tool for Practitioners
6. Evaluating the Effectiveness of CARE USA's Advocacy to Promote International Health and Development Programs
7. Practical Methodology for Evaluating Advocacy Efforts
8. Expanding Advocacy Capacity: Findings from the Evaluation of The California Endowment Clinic Consortia Policy and Advocacy Program
9. Evaluating Policy Efforts through Systems and Organization Theories

Click on a title above to jump to the summary for that session. Session summaries begin on page 4.

Looking Ahead (upcoming events / dates to save / work in progress)

Deadline Alert! Call for Sessions

March 20, 2009 • Midnight, U.S. Eastern Time

Session proposals for the American Evaluation Association's 2009 conference (November 11-14 in Orlando, Florida, USA) are due on Friday, March 20. The AEA's Advocacy and Policy Change Topical Interest Group is a great venue to share your experiences in advocacy evaluation. There are several session types to fit your topic, including demonstration, think tank, panel discussion, expert lecture, and more. If you think you might be interested in proposing a session, be sure to review the proposal requirements well in advance of the deadline—again, that's midnight of U.S. Eastern time, Friday, March 20, 2009.

New Journal to Focus on Advocacy Summer 2009

Advocacy and policy change will be the topic of an upcoming issue of The Foundation Review, a new peer-reviewed journal for the philanthropic sector. Contributions to the journal are written by foundation staff and boards, and by those who work with them. TFR “provides rigorous research and writing, presented in an accessible style,” sharing evaluation results, tools, and knowledge. The third issue, “Advocacy and Policy Change,” is slated for release in the summer of 2009.

Find out more about TFR at its website, www.foundationreview.org. You can sign up for a free trial issue, to receive future calls for papers, or to be a peer reviewer.

The Foundation Review is a publication of the Dorothy A. Johnson Center for Philanthropy and Nonprofit Leadership at Grand Valley State University.

AEA Advocacy Evaluation Session Summaries, continued

1. Online Evaluation Resources

Presenters: Johanna Gladfelter Morariu and Susan Hoechstetter

Advocates need tools and resources to help assess their work. This session provided an overview of what’s currently available online, including:

- Free tools: Innovation Network’s Point K Learning Center, Continuous Progress’ Advocacy Progress Planner, and Alliance for Justice’s Resources for Evaluating Community Organizing.
- Low-cost tools: Alliance for Justice’s advocacy capacity assessment and advocacy evaluation tools.
- A free newsletter: As our readers already know, Advocacy Evaluation Update exists to connect the field of advocacy evaluation.

Session materials:

Johanna Gladfelter Morariu’s presentation slides and handout

Sue Hoechstetter’s presentation slides

Johanna Gladfelter Morariu’s presentation of Continuous Progress’ slides

If you have questions about this session, please contact Johanna Gladfelter Morariu (jmorariu [at] innonet [dot] org).

« Back to list of sessions

AEA Advocacy Evaluation Session Summaries, continued

2. Striving for Alignment: One Funder's Lessons in Supporting Advocacy

Presenters: Ehren Reed and Tanya Beer

Alignment between funders and grantees is very important in advocacy work. It eases the burden of evaluation reporting for grantees, and helps nonprofits and foundations move closer to realizing a common vision for success. This demonstration highlighted the ongoing efforts of The Colorado Trust—with help from its evaluation partner, Innovation Network—to incorporate principles of alignment into its grantmaking approach. The session outlined the unique evaluation methodology Innovation Network has designed for this project. Funder and evaluator both shared lessons learned, including:

- True alignment should bridge not only across grantees working towards the same ends, but across funders as well.
- Striving for alignment requires willingness and creativity on the part of the funder, open lines of communication, and a great deal of trust between the funder and its grantees.

Session materials:

Tanya and Ehren's presentation slides

If you have questions about this session, please contact Tanya Beer (tanya [at] coloradotrust [dot] org) or Ehren Reed (ereed [at] innonet [dot] org).

« Back to list of sessions

3. Complex Challenges in Evaluating Advocacy:

Internal Governance Structures and Public Policy Dispute Resolutions

Presenters: Bonnie Shepard, Maureen Berner, and John Stephens

Bonnie Shepard presented about her experience examining governance issues in coalitions. Governance issues are an essential aspect of many advocacy evaluations. The study describes several aspects of internal governance, such as resolving tension and clarifying decision-making, that play an important role in successful coalition work.

Maureen Berner and John Stephens presented their findings that evaluations of public policy dispute resolution (“PPDR”) and public participation (“PP”) have some similarities, but several important differences, including:

- How agreements are reached;
- How broad the scope of participation is;
- How constituencies are represented; and
- Who has decision-making authority in each context.

Session materials:

Bonnie's presentation

Maureen and John's presentation

Maureen and John's draft paper: Learning From Your Neighbor: The Value of Public Participation Evaluation For Public Policy Dispute Resolution

AEA Advocacy Evaluation Session Summaries

Session #3: Complex Challenges in Evaluating Advocacy, continued

If you have questions about this session, please contact Bonnie Shepard (bshepard [at] ssds [dot] net) or John Stephens (stephens [at] sog [dot] unc [dot] edu).

« Back to list of sessions

4. Practical Guidance and Tools for Advocacy Evaluation

Presenters: Anne Gienapp, Tom Kelly, Kendall Guthrie, Jane Reisman, Sarah Stachowiak, Justin Louie, and Catherine Crystal Foster

Anne Gienapp, Kendall Guthrie, and Justin Louie presented lessons and guidance derived from a variety of advocacy capacity building efforts. Support for these efforts was provided by the Annie E. Casey Foundation, the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation, and The California Endowment.

Key points:

- Tools are not a magic bullet. Successful advocacy evaluation capacity building requires both tools and education—and capacity must be built among grantees, foundation program officers, and evaluators.
- There is a tension between consistent approaches and innovation. There is a real need for efficiency and consistency in language, expectations, and approach. At the same time, the field needs new ideas to thrive.
- Justin and the other evaluators from Blueprint Research & Design focused on relationships. They found that community organizers were more engaged and productive when evaluators gave them concrete examples, templates, and tools that dealt with the kinds of relational dynamics that are most important and familiar to organizers.
- Sustained evaluation requires organizational stability and commitment.

Session materials:

ORS' Paper: Real-life Lessons Learned and Resources in Building Capacity for Advocacy and Policy Evaluation among KIDS COUNT Grantees

More information:

About Organizational Research Services \(ORS\)

ORS report: A Guide to Measuring Advocacy and Policy

About Catherine Crystal Foster

About Blueprint Research & Design

If you have questions about this session, please contact Anne Gienapp (agienapp [at] organizationalresearch [dot] com), Justin Louie (justin [at] blueprintrd [dot] com), or Catherine Crystal Foster (catherine [at] blueprintrd [dot] com).

« Back to list of sessions

AEA Advocacy Evaluation Session Summaries, continued

5. Assessing Foundation Communications: A New Tool for Practitioners

Presenters: Edith Asibey and Justin van Fleet

The presenters unveiled a new guide to help foundations and nonprofits evaluate their communications. The guide, Are We There Yet?, was created by Asibey Consulting for the Communications Network, with support from the David and Lucile Packard Foundation.

Are We There Yet? features nine practical steps that will help users to develop their own communications evaluation strategy. The guide combines elements of planning and evaluation, and it focuses on progress evaluation and the need for course corrections. Several foundations offered examples of evaluation in action as features in the guide, which also offers suggestions on choosing the right evaluation techniques and budgeting for evaluating communications.

If you have questions about this session, please contact Edith Asibey (edith [at] asibey [dot] com).

« Back to list of sessions

6. Evaluating the Effectiveness of CARE USA's Advocacy to Promote International Health and Development Programs

Presenters: Carlisle Levine, Julia Coffman, and Edith Asibey

One of CARE USA's advocacy evaluation challenges is defining what qualifies someone (in this case, any given member of the U.S. Congress) as a "champion" for a particular cause. Once someone is a champion, the challenge becomes how to assess changes in degree—how much more of a champion is that person than they were last year? During this roundtable session, participants offered some suggestions:

- Use a participatory approach: Ask U.S. Congressional staffers to help define indicators and develop a scale.
- Consider a functional definition: In community organizing, a leader has been defined as someone who creates followers who become new leaders.
- Be clear about the end goal, since this will help identify the qualities sought in a champion: Is the goal to create long-term support for issues within the U.S. Congress, and/or is the goal to gain support for current legislation?

If you have questions about this session, please contact Carlisle Levine (clevine [at] care [dot] org), Edith Asibey (edith [at] asibey [dot] com), or Julia Coffman (jcoffman [at] evaluationexchange [dot] org).

« Back to list of sessions

AEA Advocacy Evaluation Session Summaries, continued

7. Practical Methodology for Evaluating Advocacy Efforts

Presenters: Annette Gardner, Claire Brindis, Lori Nascimento, Sara Geierstanger, and John Risley

This session featured two presentations about advocacy and policy change evaluation approaches: one on using case studies, and one on “second tier” advocacy efforts.

Using Case Studies to Evaluate Policy and Advocacy: Annette Gardner, Claire Brindis, and Sara Geierstanger are evaluators with the Philip R. Lee Institute for Health Policy Studies at the University of California, San Francisco. They worked with grantees of the California Endowment’s Clinic Consortia Policy and Advocacy Program to develop stories of exemplary practices. These narratives—though focusing on different program areas, such as policy advocacy, developing partnerships, or improving quality—shared crosscutting themes and progress in achieving longer-term outcomes. Next, the evaluators developed in-depth case studies of three different policy-change initiatives, with a focus on how advocacy contributes to policy change. The findings indicate that the program has afforded grantees an opportunity to experiment and develop novel and sustainable solutions based on their communities’ unique needs. Factors found to be important to achieving a policy change included:

- Staff expertise,
- Early and frequent participation during the policy process,
- Business acumen,
- Coalition-building and stakeholder mobilization, and
- Making effective use of partnerships with member clinics.

Second Tier Advocacy and Policy Change Evaluation: The Greater Kalamazoo United Way pursues policy advocacy by supporting other advocacy organizations. The presenter argued that for such an approach to be effective, the United Way must devote appropriate resources to the evaluation of the advocacy efforts of their partners. The paper on which this presentation was based proposes a checklist for advocacy evaluation approaches, including output-focused short- and intermediate-term measures and long-term outcomes that are more directly related to policy change.

Session materials:

Paper \(Gardner et al.\): Achieving a Policy Change: Key Strategies and Factors for Success

If you have questions about this session, please contact Annette Gardner (annette [dot] gardner [at] ucsf [dot] edu) or John Risley (jrisley [at] gkuw [dot] org).

« Back to list of sessions

AEA Advocacy Evaluation Session Summaries, continued

8. Expanding Advocacy Capacity: Findings from the Evaluation of The California Endowment Clinic Consortia Policy and Advocacy Program

Presenters: Annette Gardner, Claire Brindis, and Lori Nascimento

In this demonstration, the presenters described the design and results of their six-year evaluation of The California Endowment's Clinic Consortia Policy and Advocacy Program. The Program funded 19 California clinic consortia (alliances of local clinics, designed to help communities develop healthcare systems that fit their needs). Program grantees undertook policy advocacy activities and worked to improve the financial stability of their member clinics. The Institute for Health Policy Studies at the University of California, San Francisco has evaluated these activities since 2002, using quantitative longitudinal measures and qualitative interviews with grantees, partner organizations, the media, and advocacy targets.

The findings indicate that grantees are achieving not only short-term outcomes, such as increased policymaker awareness of clinic policy issues, but also longer-term outcomes, such as increased funding to clinics and increased access to care.

The evaluation findings also offer broader insight into successful advocacy. The most effective advocacy activities varied from 2002 to 2006. Over time, the grantees became more involved in the policymaking process—for example, helping to draft rules and regulations. In the early years of the grant, the emphasis was on developing or strengthening relationships with policymakers, and as a result many grantees participated on commissions and taskforces. In addition to sharing findings on achievement of outcomes, the presenters also described four data collection tools they used to assess changes in advocacy capacity.

Session materials:

Annette's presentation slides

If you have questions about this session, please contact Annette Gardner (annette [dot] gardner [at] ucsf [dot] edu).

« Back to list of sessions

AEA Advocacy Evaluation Session Summaries, continued

9. Evaluating Policy Efforts through Systems and Organization Theories

Presenters: Cindy Roper, Mary Kreger, Claire Brindis, Dana Hughes, Simran Sabherwal, Katherine Sargent, Christine MacFarlane, Annalisa Robles, and Marion Standish

In this session, Cindy Roper of Clemson University's Charles H. Houston Center argued that organizational theory is useful as a way to view accountability and public policy. Organizational theory highlights interactions between program performance and the context in which the program operates. The study of these interactions can provide insight into both the challenges and the accomplishments of program performance.

Session materials:

Cindy's presentation slides

Paper: Accountability and the No Child Left Behind Act: Implications for Public Policy

If you have questions about this session, please contact Cindy Roper (cgroper [at] clemson [dot] edu).

« Back to list of sessions

Advocacy Evaluation Update #5 (February 2009)

© 2009 Innovation Network, Inc.

Project Staff: Johanna Morariu, Simone Parrish, Andy Stamp, and Lily Zandniapour

Produced with support from The Atlantic Philanthropies

Image Credits

The Foundation Review logo used with permission.

Used and/or modified under Creative Commons license:

- Feet forward: <http://www.flickr.com/photos/zen/9822071/>

- Keyhole: <http://www.flickr.com/photos/nealf/2172002657/>

- Alarm clock: <http://www.flickr.com/photos/laffy4k/367822192/>

Questions, comments, contributions?

Contact us:

advocacy [at] innonet [dot] org