TIPS

. . . for Evaluating Advocacy

A Checklist for Grantees

✓ Discuss Evaluation Expectations Early
   Grantors and grantees can arrive at a common understanding early on of reasonable advocacy expectations and of ways to demonstrate the grantee's contribution.

✓ Develop Long-Term as well as Incremental Goals
   Policy goals may take years or even decades to achieve. For instance, a grantee may have a long-term goal to make emergency food available by 2010 to all Californians in need and an incremental goal of educating 25% of the public about hunger in the state by the end of this year.

✓ Use Benchmarks to Measure Outcomes, Progress, Capacity Building
   A sample outcome benchmark may be obtaining a $2 million appropriation for clean water programs; a progress benchmark could be support gained from a key legislator; a capacity building benchmark may be educating 50 constituents about the issue and mobilizing them to contact officials.

✓ Use Benchmarks of Success that Target Relevant Audiences
   Target audiences may include public officials, the public/constituents, other organizations, and the grantee’s own organization.

✓ Tell the Story
   Tell the story behind the benchmarks. Explain the process, and why something did or didn’t work. Maintaining a budget appropriation level, for example, can be viewed as a success rather than a failure to achieve the goal of more funding, if the context is explained.

✓ Make Use of Available Evaluation Resources and Plan Ahead
   Organizations’ self-evaluations can be very informative. When planning to use outside evaluators, grantees should include them in early budgets.

✓ Make the Evaluation Fit the Nature of the Advocacy Work Conducted
   As an example, obtaining face-to-face meetings with key state officials to discuss a policy issue might sound routine. In fact, the meetings might be hard-won, critical steps in an effort to influence state regulators, and should be documented and evaluated accordingly.

From Investing in Change: A Funder’s Guide to Supporting Advocacy, a publication of: